

Brief of Work

This is a special place that is yet to be developed. Here, you can still enjoy the beautiful sight of the sun shining on the horizon, which is not something you can easily see in a busy city.

In fact, there are even houses built on the water here. The people who live in this place are more laid-back and less stressed compared to those who live in the city. The simplicity and relaxed atmosphere here is very different from that in the busy city.

I took this picture because it reminded me about how difficult it is to find a place that hasn't been covered in concrete. It is rare to come across a spot where urbanisation hasn't taken over yet. In our fast-developing city, it is becoming harder to find untouched natural spaces like this one.

This photo not only captures a beautiful moment but also reminds us to strike a balance between urban development and preservation of natural places.
